THE INSTITUTE

GENERAL

THOUSANDS of persons today are engaged in furthering the art of radio, television, and the many fields ancillary thereto. Yet, of all important technical developments, few have as good a case as radio in tracing its origin to one individual. It is true that Clerk Maxwell, in the middle of the nineteenth century, drew upon the experiences of Faraday and Oersted; but the conception of electromagnetic waves was distinctly new and was due solely to that first director of the now celebrated Cavendish Laboratory. It remained for Heinrich Hertz, at Karlsruhe, to demonstrate experimentally for the first time the transmission and reception of electromagnetic waves generated by an oscillating circuit.

Alert to the significance of this phenomenon, Marconi, Poulsen, Alexanderson, Fessenden, and other engineers at home and abroad developed equipment by which messages in code could be transmitted without wires and over long distances. With the advent of the vacuum tube, wireless telegraphy gave way to wireless telephony and, later, to radio broadcasting. Today radio in all its ramifications stands as a superb tribute to the combined developmental genius of many thousands of engineers skilled in electricity, acoustics, and electronics.

In May, 1912, a small group of far-seeing engineers recognized in wireless of that day an infant industry which, through scientific research and engineering development, could be brought to magnificent fruition for the benefit of mankind. The growth and success of radio development were then clearly seen to rest not alone upon international co-operation, but also upon collaboration in allied fields of science and engineering. It was against this background that A. N. Goldsmith, J. V. L. Hogan, and R. H. Marriott founded, through the merger of two small professional societies, The Institute of Radio Engineers. Starting with fewer than fifty members in 1912, the Institute today embraces some 30,000 members from every corner of the earth.

Today, The Institute of Radio Engineers, located at 1 East 79th Street, is an incorporated, nonprofit organization having as its object the advancement of the theory and practice of radio and electronics, including allied branches of engineering and all related arts and sciences. To this end, the Institute prepares technical papers, reports, and general information of interest to radio engineers. It holds meeting and discussions throughout the United States and Canada. It maintains committees for collating and standardizing the results of technical research and development. Among the fields covered in these activities are radio communication, sound broadcasting, television, marine and aerial guidance, electron tubes, radio-frequency measurements, engineering education, electron optics, sound and picture electrical recording and reproduction, power and manufacturing applications of radio-and-electronic technique, industrial electronic control and processes, and medical electrical research and applications.

Membership in the Institute is distributed among various grades representative of experience and achievement in radio engineering and allied fields. The grade of Fellow is one of distinction, and appointment thereto by the Board of Directors is made on the basis of eminence and distinguished service. The grade of Special Member similarly is conferred by invitation only. Other grades—Senior Member, Member, Associate, and Student—are filled from applicants whose age, experience, and attainments conform to the respective requirements set forth in the Constitution.

To promote the arts and techniques incident to radio development, the Institute has established some 23 technical committees covering fields of current activity in radio engineering and composed of persons of demonstrated ability in their respective fields. Through the Institute, these committees publish standards whose object is to set forth, partly in collaboration with technical committees of other engineering societies, accepted definitions of terms, and methods of measurements of physical quantities used in radio engineering practices. These committees are listed in the June and October issues of PROCEEDING OF THE I.R.E.

The Institute holds, at least once a year, a technical meeting for its entire membership. At this annual meeting, manufacturers exhibit equipment of recent design and interest to radio engineers. It is believed that by this means mutual benefit accrues to both engineer and manufacturer through first-hand acquaintance with the activities of one another. To facilitate interim meetings, Sections have been established throughout the United States, Canada, Territory of Hawaii, and Argentina, to hold meetings under the aegis of the Institute.

To serve special fields of interest, Professional Groups have been formed in each of several technical fields on an Institute-wide basis. These Groups organize meetings and conferences on subjects of special interest to their members, and may publish technical material for distribution to their memberships. In addition, the Groups provide a means for ensuring proper coverage of their fields in the publications of the Institute and for promoting recognition of their leaders among the Institute membership at large. A list of sections and professional groups appears bimonthly in the PROCEEDINGS OF THE I.R.E.

The management of The Institute of Radio Engineers resides in a Board of Directors, selected from the body of Fellows and Senior Members, acting through an Executive Committee and the officers of the Institute. The Sections of the Institute are grouped into eight Regions, and each Region is represented on the Board of Directors by a Regional Director elected bi-annually from, and by, the membership of the respective Region. The President and Vice-President are elected annually from the body of Fellows and Senior Members.

PUBLICATIONS OF THE INSTITUTE

PROCEEDINGS OF THE I.R.E.

Perhaps the most important single activity of the Institute is the publication of a technical journal. The first issue of the PROCEEDINGS OF THE INSTITUTE OF RADIO ENGINEERS appeared in 1913. Established first as a quarterly and later a bimonthly, the PROCEEDINGS for the last 25 years has been published in twelve numbers annually. In 1939, the name of this technical organ of the Institute was shortened to PROCEEDINGS OF THE I.R.E.

The PROCEEDINGS OF THE I.R.E. is the official publication of The Institute of Radio Engineers, and in it are published technical papers, discussions, and communications approved by the Papers Review Committee, Board of Editors, and Administrative Committee of the Board of Editors of the Institute, as well as IRE Standards prepared by Institute technical committees. Over 4,900 papers have been published in the PROCEEDINGS dealing with advanced research topics, mathematico-physical analyses of engineering problems, current engineering developments of equipment and methods, commercial applications of engineering methods and products, historical papers, and tutorial papers covering specific aspects of radio and electronic engineering. In addition, space is devoted to organizational and membership news, book reviews, announcements of new products, and abstracts of papers published in technical publications the world over. Of late years an increasing volume of nontechnical material in its pages has proved of interest to members. The PROCEEDINGS OF THE I.R.E. is mailed without charge to all members; subscription price to nonmembers is $18.00 per year, $19.00 if sent to foreign destinations.

STANDARDS

Standardization reports have been issued since 1913. The early reports were confined to the definition of technical terms and presentation of standard graphical symbols. The more recent reports include methods of testing certain items of equipment and measuring quantities associated with the radio art, and letter symbols and mathematical notation. Starting in 1949, IRE Standards have been published in the PROCEEDINGS, rather than as separate reports, in order that they might be available to all members at no extra charge. IRE HEADQUARTERS BUILDING

During the recent war, directors of the Institute were convinced The Institute of Radio Engineers was destined to remain one of the great engineering societies of the world. Pressed by the need for adequate headquarters space, a Building Fund campaign was launched to provide the Institute with a permanent home, expand the Institute facilities, and, thereby, create a closer union between radio engineers and their industry.

Over $600,000 was donated by Institute members and by the radio-electronic industry. The Institute purchased, in 1945, the building at the corner of 79 Street and Fifth Avenue in New York City as a permanent home.

The establishment, a showplace, provides offices for the headquarters staff, facilities for Institute activities and a dignified and impressive meeting place for members. Members of the Institute are always welcome to utilize these facilities, and to avail themselves of the services of the headquarters staff.
